LIFE IN LEADVILLE.

It Has Grown Too Tame to Interest

the Visitor. (From the Louisville Courier-Journal.)
There used to be a deal more variety
in life in Leadville than there is now.
In its earlier days, every phase of human nature was represented here, and if there was any wickedness common to any other section of the globe of which this camp had no specimen some publicspirited bad man would import a supply. It was a lively mining camp in all that the term implies, and never hid the light of its wickedness under a bushel. Nothing was hidden, neither the saloons nor the gambling houses, nor the worse places. The man whowanted to be bad need seek but lightly for an opportunity. As for the diverfor an opportunity. As for the diver-tissement of an impromptu duel to the death, that was so easily obtained as to quickly lose its charm. Everybody car-ried a "guo," and, soon or late, every-body used it with a fellow-being for a

Now, this is largely changed. Lendville is not yet a prominent way station on the route to the Better Land, but is as peaceful as the average town of its as peaceth as the average town of its size in or out of the mining region.

Men here are too busy to atend to the affairs of their neighbors; there does not seem to be an under amount of drinking, and bushess goes on about as it does elsewhere. State street is still here, and those who knew it in other days may be interested. other days may be interested in knowing that its sanitary condition from a moral standpoint is still bad and needing fumigation and disinfection. An enering tunigation and chantection. An ener-egtic and general configuration along that thoroughfare would result in a purifica-tion of the moral and physical atmosphere. Still, I contend that Lendville is no worse than many other towns, and by compari-son with some of them, and especially with its former self, is a bright and shighing light set upon a hill.

VIRGINIA'S LUCKY STONES,

of Weeping Fairles.

the most noted geologists of the world, says the New York World. Just why silicate should crystallize is the first problem that confronts them, and the second is why the crystallization should always assume the form of a cross.

It is only in one part of Virginia that these stones are found. Patrick county is the favored locality, but almost every Virginian has sent to some friend or neighbor for a specimen, for they are supposed to be a lacky stone.

Indeed, no self-respecting citizen of the old dominion will be found with a rabbit's foot in his possession nowadays, and he must have a fairy stone for a mascot. The legend which gives these little crystals such a reputation for luck is not only old but is quaintly beautiful.

When the cruenifixion took place the fairles of that particular section of Virginia were overwhelmed with grief and their tears in falling crystallized into tiny crosses. For many years the fairy stones have been the particular mascots of Patrick county citizens and it was only by accident that the fame of the emblems has spread.

A few months ago a certain Col. Propper went into the mountains of that county on a prospecting tour, and while there put up a farmhouse. He noticed that all the people about the place were wearing irregular, cross-shaped crystals, and on seking found out the significance of the custom. He secured one and within a few days struck a bonanza.

Shortly after the gallant colonel appeared in Washington, his studs, cuff buttons and scar pins all made of fairy stones. Congressmen and even grave Senators hadgered him for a mascot, but only a favored few secured the covered lucky stones. The fairy stones are scarce and are found after diligent search in the beds of the streams, along the dried-up channels of brooks and rivulets.
